

Whip around is often used as a closure activity. Students are asked to make a list of three items related to the lesson, unit or study. Students individually respond on a piece of paper. After they have listed at least three items, they stand up. The teacher randomly calls on a student to share an item from his or her paper. Students check off any items said by another student and sit down when all of their ideas have been shared with the group, whether or not they were the one to share them.
